Introduction to the Toolkit

Legislating for the security sector is a complex and difficult task. Many lawmakers thus find it tempting to copy legislation from other countries. This expedites the drafting process, especially when the texts are available in the language of the lawmaker, but more often than not, the result is poor legislation.

Even after being amended, the copied laws are often out of date before coming into effect. They may no longer be in line with international standards or they may not fully respond to the requirements of the local political and societal context. Copied laws are sometimes inconsistent with the national legislation in place.

In some cases, there is simply no model law available in the region for the type of legislation that is needed. This has been the case in the Arab region, where the security sector has only slowly begun to be publicly debated. It is thus difficult to find good model laws for democratic policing or for parliamentary oversight of intelligence services.

It is therefore not surprising that many Arab lawmakers have felt frustrated, confused, and overwhelmed by the task of drafting legislation for the security sector. They found it difficult to access international norms and standards because little or no resources were available in Arabic. Many of them did not know where to search for model laws and several were about to give up. Some eventually turned to DCAF for assistance.

The idea of a practical toolkit for legislators in the Arab region came when practitioners began looking for a selection of standards, norms and model laws in Arabic that would help them draft new legislation. Experts from the Arab region and DCAF thus decided to work together and develop some practical tools.

Who is this toolkit for?

This toolkit is primarily addressed to all those who intend to create new or develop existing security sector legislation. This includes parliamentarians, civil servants, legal experts and nongovernmental organisations. The toolkit may also be helpful to security officials and, as a reference tool, to researchers and students interested in security sector legislation.

What is in the toolkit?

The bilingual toolkit contains a number of booklets in English and Arabic that provide norms and standards, guidebooks as well as practical examples of model laws in various areas of security sector legislation.

The following series have been published or are being processed:

- Police legislation
- Intelligence legislation
- Military Justice legislation
- Status of Forces Agreements

Additional series will be added as the needs arise. The existing series can easily be expanded through the addition of new booklets, based on demand from the Arab region.

What is the purpose of this toolkit?

The toolkit seeks to assist lawmakers in the Arab region in responding to citizens' expectations. Arab citizens demand professional service from police and security forces, which should be effective, efficient and responsive to their needs. They want police and security organisations and their members to abide by the law and human right norms and to be accountable for their performance and conduct. The toolkit thus promotes international standards in security sector legislation, such as democratic oversight, good governance and transparency.

The toolkit offers easy access in Arabic and English to international norms as well as examples of legislation outside the Arab region. This allows to compare between different experiences and practices.

The scarcity of Arab literature on security sector legislation has been a big problem for Arab lawmakers. The toolkit seeks to address this deficiency. One of its aims is to reduce time lawmakers spend on searching for information, thus allowing them to concentrate on their main task. With more information becoming available in Arabic, many citizens and civil society groups may find it easier to articulate their vision of the type of police and security service they want and to contribute to the development of a modern and strong legal framework for the security sector.

Why is it important to have a strong legal framework for the security sector?

A sound legal framework is a precondition for effective, efficient and accountable security sector governance because it:

- Defines the role and mission of the different security organisations;
- Defines the prerogatives and limits the power of security organisations and their members;
- Defines the role and powers of institutions, which control and oversee security organisations;
- Provides a basis for accountability, as it draws a clear line between legal and illegal behaviour;
- Enhances public trust and strengthens legitimacy of government and its security forces.

For all these reasons, security sector reform often starts with a complete review and overhaul of the national security sector legislation. The point is to identify and address contradictions and the lack of clarity regarding roles and mandates of the different institutions.

How to use this tool?

Every state has specific needs and expectations regarding its intelligence services. These demands are influenced by factors such as history, legal tradition, and a state’s security environment. Legislation on intelligence services will invariably reflect these factors. Notwithstanding these differences between states, lawmakers can benefit from studying other states’ legislation and practice. Additionally, lawmakers should refer to international standards and best practice in the area of intelligence governance. It is important to note that international law imposes restrictions on what states can permit their intelligence services to do; lawmakers should take account of these standards when developing the legal framework for intelligence services.

The intelligence series of the “Legislating for the Security Sector” toolkit facilitates the drafting process and development of legislation for intelligence services by providing good examples of intelligence legislation, as well as an explanation of the relevant international standards in this area.

Although each state’s legislation on intelligence services is unique, a number of common elements of a comprehensive legal framework for intelligence services can be identified. The Editorial Board of the toolkit “Legislating for the Security Sector” developed a grid that highlights these elements (see Table 1). This booklet contains the Canadian Security Intelligence Service Act in its original form, as well as the provisions of this legislation reorganised by topic,

The Canadian Intelligence System

Overview

The Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS) Act regulates Canada's civilian intelligence service. The Canadian parliament adopted the Act in 1984 in light of the conclusions of a Royal Commission of inquiry into the activities of Canada's previous intelligence service, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Security Service. The CSIS Act followed the inquiry's recommendations by creating a new intelligence service that is separate from the police, as well as a new system for intelligence oversight.

CSIS investigates and reports to the government on threats to the security of Canada. It primarily operates domestically but can collect information about threats to the security of Canada abroad. CSIS is also responsible for carrying out security clearance assessments for government employees. CSIS has no law enforcement functions and is not permitted to arrest or detain anyone.

Canada also has a government agency – the Communications Security Establishment – responsible for collecting information from information and communications systems located outside of Canada. Additionally, the Canadian armed forces have an intelligence branch tasked with collecting and providing intelligence to support the armed forces' operations. These agencies are not regulated by the CSIS Act, and therefore are not addressed in this booklet.

Control and oversight of CSIS

Canada has a comprehensive system for the control and oversight of CSIS. This includes four main institutions:

1. The Minister of Public Safety is politically responsible for CSIS. The minister provides general direction to CSIS, issues regulations for CSIS's work, and approves certain operations and activities. For example, the minister must approve requests by CSIS to use special powers to collect information, before such requests are submitted to the Federal Court for consideration.

2. The Inspector General (IG) of CSIS is responsible for monitoring CSIS's operational activities for compliance with the law, ministerial directions and its own operational policies. Each year, the Inspector General provides the minister with a "certificate" of his/her findings in these areas, as well as an evaluation of the annual report of the director of CSIS. The IG is appointed by and reports to the minister.
3. The Security Intelligence Review Committee is an independent oversight body made up of persons who are not members of government or parliament. The government appoints members of the committee in consultation with the main opposition parties. The SIRC reviews retrospectively all aspects of CSIS's performance to ensure that it is both effective and complies with the law. In common with the IG, the SIRC has access to all information held by CSIS and can summon members of CSIS and the executive to appear before it. SIRC reports to parliament through the minister.
4. The Federal Court also plays a role in controlling CSIS because its approval is required in order for CSIS to use special powers, such as secret surveillance and the monitoring of communications. The judiciary may also investigate and adjudicate upon civil and criminal matters relating to the activities of CSIS and its employees.

Canada does not have a dedicated parliamentary committee responsible for overseeing CSIS. Parliament adopts the annual budget for CSIS; this process normally includes the director of CSIS appearing before a parliamentary committee. However, parliament does not carry out a detailed analysis of CSIS's budget estimates.

Other relevant laws

The CSIS Act is primary instrument regulating the activities and oversight of CSIS. However, there are numerous other laws which regulate the work of CSIS. These include: the Canadian Constitution, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the Access to Information Act, the Security of Information Act, the Privacy Act, the Immigration and Refugee Protection Act, and the Public Safety Act.
