Introduction to the toolkit

Legislating for the security sector is a complex and difficult task. Many lawmakers thus find it tempting to copy legislation from other countries. This expedites the drafting process, especially when the texts are available in the language of the lawmaker, but more often than not, the result is poor legislation.

Even after being amended, the copied laws are often out of date before coming into effect. They may no longer be in line with international standards or they may not fully respond to the requirements of the local political and societal context. Copied laws are sometimes inconsistent with the national legislation in place.

In some cases, there is simply no model law available in the region for the type of legislation that is needed. This has been the case in the Arab region, where the security sector has only slowly begun to be publicly debated. It is thus difficult to find good model laws for democratic policing or for parliamentary oversight of intelligence services.

It is therefore not surprising that many Arab lawmakers have felt frustrated, confused, and overwhelmed by the task of drafting legislation for the security sector. They found it difficult to access international norms and standards because little or no resources were available in Arabic. Many of them did not know where to search for model laws and several were about to give up. Some eventually turned to DCAF for assistance.

The idea of a practical toolkit for legislators in the Arab region came when practitioners began looking for a selection of standards, norms and model laws in Arabic that would help them draft new legislation. Experts from the Arab region and DCAF thus decided to work together and develop some practical tools.

Who is this toolkit for?

This toolkit is primarily addressed to all those who intend to create new or develop existing security sector legislation. This includes parliamentarians, civil servants, legal experts and nongovernmental organisations.

The toolkit may also be helpful to security officials and, as a reference tool, to researchers and students interested in security sector legislation.

What is in the toolkit?

The bilingual toolkit contains a number of booklets in English and Arabic that provide norms and standards, guidebooks as well as practical examples of model laws in various areas of security sector legislation.

The following series have been published or are being processed:

- Police legislation
- Intelligence legislation
- Military Justice legislation
- Status of Forces Agreements

Additional series will be added as the needs arise. The existing series can easily be expanded through the addition of new booklets, based on demand from the Arab region.

What is the purpose of this toolkit?

The toolkit seeks to assist lawmakers in the Arab region in responding to citizens' expectations. Arab citizens demand professional service from police and security forces, which should be effective, efficient and responsive to their needs. They want police and security organisations and their members to abide by the law and human rights norms and to be accountable for their performance and conduct. The toolkit thus promotes international standards in security sector legislation, such as democratic oversight, good governance and transparency.

The toolkit offers easy access in Arabic and English to international norms as well as examples of legislation outside the Arab region. This allows to compare between different experiences and practices.

The scarcity of Arab literature on security sector legislation has been a big problem for Arab lawmakers. The toolkit seeks to address this deficiency. One of its aims is to reduce time lawmakers spend on searching for information, thus allowing them to concentrate on their main task. With more information becoming available in Arabic, many citizens and civil society groups may find it easier to articulate their vision of the type of police and security service they want and to contribute to the development of a modern and strong legal framework for the security sector.

Why is it important to have a strong legal framework for the security sector?

A sound legal framework is a precondition for effective, efficient and accountable security sector governance because:

- It defines the role and mission of the different security organisations;
- Defines the prerogatives and limits the power of security organisations and their members;
- Defines the role and powers of institutions, which control and oversee security organisations;
- Provides a basis for accountability, as it draws a clear line between legal and illegal behaviour;
- Enhances public trust and strengthens legitimacy of government and its security forces.

For all these reasons, security sector reform often starts with a complete review and overhaul of the national security sector legislation. The point is to identify and address contradictions and the lack of clarity regarding roles and mandates of the different institutions.

How to use this tool?

Based on its history and political constitution, each federation or state has specific needs and expectations towards its police services. Police legislation should reflect these expectations. Despite their specific situation, countries can benefit from other nations' experience as well as from international standards and best practices in the field of police legislation/policing. The police series of the toolkit "Legislating for the Security Sector" facilitates the drafting process and development of police legislation by providing international standards and models of democratic and community-based (national) police legislation.

Although each police system is unique, some common elements for a sound structure of police legislation can be identified. The Editorial Board of the toolkit "Legislating for the Security Sector" developed a grid that highlights these elements. Typically, police laws should be concise and general, comprise only the most necessary provisions and refer to other relevant national legislation and international laws and standards. Specific issues and details should be addressed separately in regulatory texts, such as rules of procedure. The advantage of this method is that the legislation remains clearly structured and can be more easily amended as it does not necessarily need to pass the more complex legislative approval process.

This booklet contains the South African police legislation in its original form, as well as its articles reorganised by topic, as shown in the table. This allows legislators to easily identify the specific topics that need to be covered in a police law, as well as to compare between different models of laws.

The South African Police

Overview

The South African Police Service (SAPS) is South Africa's main law enforcement agency. Its mandate is clearly laid down in South Africa's Constitution: "...to prevent, combat and investigate crime, to maintain public order, to protect and secure the inhabitants of the Republic and their property, and to uphold and enforce the law". To this effect, the SAPS operates at the national and provincial levels.

At the national level, the National Police Commissioner controls and manages the police in accordance with the national policing policy and the directions of the Minister for Safety and Security. At the provincial level, the provincial commissioners are responsible for policing in their respective provinces.

Community Policing

Since the end of the apartheid era in 1994, the South African Police Service has undergone important changes. During the apartheid era, the South African police forces were a repressive tool serving the interests of a minority. Their main objective was not to provide security to all citizens irrespective of their race, but to support an undemocratic regime. During the process of democratic transition, the new government recognised the need to establish a police service that could be seen as legitimate by all citizens. Against this background, the new government determined that law enforcement should respond to the security needs of all citizens. The concept of community policing has thus been central to the government's approach to law enforcement in post apartheid South Africa. Written as a manual for the police, the 'Policy Framework and Guidelines on Community Policing' (1997) outlines South Africa's approach in this field and considers various strategies for implementing it at station level. According to this document, community policing "emphasizes the establishment of police-community partnerships and a problem-solving approach responsive to the needs of the community".

Who supervises the police?

There are numerous layers, which ensure civilian oversight of the SAPS:

Executive Oversight: The Minister for Safety and Security is responsible for policing and determines, in consultation with the provincial governments, the national policing policy. Within the Ministry for Safety and Security, the Secretariat for Safety and Security is responsible for ensuring executive oversight, and promoting democratic accountability and transparency of the Service. It also monitors the implementation of policy and directions issued by the Minister. In the execution of its mandate, members of the Secretariat enjoy broad powers. They may request information and documents under the control of the Service and may enter any building or premises under the control of the Service.

Parliamentary Oversight: The South African Parliament plays an important role in overseeing the South African Police Service. To ensure transparency and accountability, the Constitution foresees that multi-party parliamentary committees must have oversight of all security services. Parliament also appoints the Executive Director of the Independent Complaints Directorate (see below) and verifies its activity reports.

In addition to executive and parliamentary oversight, there are two additional civilian institutions, which ensure oversight at the national and provincial levels:

The Independent Complaints Directorate (ICD) investigates complaints of brutality, criminality and misconduct by members of the SAPS and the Municipal Police Service (MPS). It operates independently from the SAPS and has the power to investigate any misconduct or offence allegedly committed by a member of the SAPS, as well as any deaths whilst in police custody or as a result of police action.

The Community Police Forums (CPF) are consultative bodies comprising about 20 members, both police officers and civilians. Their main mission is to improve police-community relations, to encourage transparency and accountability by monitoring police actions at the local level, and to mobilise the community to take responsibility in the fight against crime.

Police legislation in South Africa

South Africa's Constitution of 1996 explicitly addresses the issue of political responsibility and control for policing in its sections 205 to 208.

Promulgated in 1995, shortly after the end of apartheid, the 'South African Police Service Act 68 of 1995' provides for the establishment, organisation, regulation and control of the South African Police Service.

Other legislative texts of relevance for the police are the 'Criminal Procedures Act 51 of 1977', the 'Judicial Matters Second Amendment Act 122 of 1998' and the 'Domestic Violence Act 116 of 1998'.

National policies, such as the 'National Crime Prevention Strategy (1996)' and the 'National Crime Combating Strategy (2000)' also influence the South African approach to policing.
